Rhode-Island Register.

THE Subscriber having had it in contemplation for some time past to publish a Register of his native state, which is acknowledged to be much wanted, begs leave to announce that he has made and is making such arrangements as to ensure its completion at a period as early as possible, probably in the course of four or five months.—This State, it is true, is small, when compared with many of the others; but a correct list of all her officers associations and public institutions is certainly on that account not the less desirable. It is the intention of the publisher to spare no pains to render the Rhode-Island Register as interesting as possible to all, particularly to the citizens of Providence. It is intended to contain a complete list of the civil, judicial and military officers of the State, the meetings of the General Assembly, the State and Federal Courts, the Friends, the different Masonic Lodges throughout the State, together with a list of their officers, &c. Also, a list of the officers of the General Government Governors of the States, municipal officers of the different towns in this State, a complete list of Banks and Insurance Offices in the State, with their officers, capitals, and the discount days of the former, post-towns and Post-Masters in Rhode-Island, and the rates of postage in the United States, as established by law.

In order to expedite the work as fast as possible, it is respectfully requested of the Town-Clerks of the different towns in the State, to furnish the publisher, as soon as they conveniently can, with a list of the municipal officers of their respective towns, the ordained ministers, with the particular denomination to which they belong, Attornies, Physicians and Surgeons, the public institutions and associations, with the date of their formation, and the present presiding officers of the same, for which they will be paid a reasonable compensation, if desired.——Gentlemen of leisure and information would also much oblige the subscriber, and enhance the value of the intended publication, by forwarding any similar statements, which might be interesting to our citizens generally; which may be directed to him by mail, or sent by any other convenient conveyance.

POETRY.

THE following lines from the pen of an esteemed female correspondent, were first published in the MERCURY, on the appearance of a Comet in 1811.—They are now republished, as appropriate to a similar celestial visitor in 1819.

EVENING CONTEMPLATION.

NOW whilst the glorious orb of day,
No longer pours his fervid ray;
But mildly beaming in the West,
Seems as retiring to his rest;
Majestic Night resumes her reign,
With Stars, and Planets, in her train;
Here glitt'ring, like the golden sands
On Peru's—or on Afric lands;
There sparkling, like the diamonds worn
In Eastern climes,—on bridal morn.

Enraptur'd with the scene—I gaze—
'Till a bright Comet's lengthening blaze
Arrests my view;—Stranger from far,
Art thou the harbinger of War?
Or, from thy magazine of fire—
Pour'st thou the Pestilence in ire?—
If such thy errand—then, thy light,
Is darker, than the darkest night.

Thus far, had human feelings spoke,
When the true Light, from darkness broke:
Vain are conjectures—GOD alone,
Who, from his uncreated throne,
Pronounced the word.—"Let there be Light,
"To rule the day, and rule the night;"
Knows the wise purpose, and the fate,
That his vast Universe awaits!

EXTRACTS,

FROM THE SERMONS OF THE REV. WILLIAM GILPIN.

"Comparing spiritual things, with spiritual."—1ST COR. II. 13.

"THE comparison I mean here to make, is between the Trinitarian and Unitarian doctrines.

In this dispute, the first point to be settled, is, how far each side receives the Scripture as a test of truth.—By some Unitarians, the Scripture is acknowledged only in part. When this is the case, the debate end. at once—The Trinitarian insists on the belief of the whole canonical body of Scripture. He does not press the Unitarian with disputed texts; particularly with that celebrated one of St John, iv. 7th v.; he only appeals to such parts of Scripture as are generally received.

If the Unitarian closes with this condition, the Trinitarian begins the debate by desiring him to examine those numerous passages, which relate to Christ's atonement. When he has examined those numerous passages with due attention, he may be asked whether they do not all seem to concur in one transaction? Whether this transaction be not fairly represented, as a mode of benefitting mankind by the death of a Saviour? And lastly, whether such atonement by the death of a Saviour, is not a transaction wholly beyond any human power?

If we can thus prove the atonement of Christ, it should I think, at once settle his Divinity.

But perhaps the Unitarian turns a deaf ear to this whole mode of reasoning—urges the absurdity of the death of a Divine Saviour—and declares he cannot found a rational faith on what he does not understand.

In this case the Trinitarian cuts him short, and refers him to the opening of the debate. We have already agreed, he tells him, that the Scripture is the test, to which we both appeal. If you run from this we end. Examine the evidences of scripture with the utmost powers of your reason. But till you have done that, you must not pretend to say, you will take one part of scripture and leave another, because you do not understand it. In fact, what is it that you do understand? How many things do you believe, without understanding them? Is Religion the only thing you expect thoroughly to understand? That part of it which relates to yourself, is easy. That part which relates to God, concerns you less to understand, and is therefore beyond your understanding.

Beaten out of this argument, the Unitarian may perhaps recur again to scripture, and endeavor to prove the humanity of Christ by a variety of passages.

The Trinitarian allows them, but on the other hand draws up at least as numerous a collection of passages which favor the divinity of Christ.

If the controversy be brought to this test, the Trinitarian thinks he has a decided superiority. For if the humanity of Christ be fairly proved from the passages quoted by the Unitarian, what can he give for mentioning the divinity of Christ in other passages? It is rather strange if it be a falsehood, that it should ever be mentioned in scripture. But that it should be distributed so largely through the scriptures and dwelt upon in such a variety of passages, is altogether wonderful, if there were no foundation for it in truth.

On the other hand, that the humanity of Christ should often be mentioned in scripture, even on the Trinitarian plan, is nothing strange, because Christ, according to that creed, is the Emmanuel or God with man, predicted by the prophet Isaiah. It is therefore very reasonable to suppose, that we should find mention made both of his divine and human nature. And to strengthen this argument, they are both sometimes joined together.

If the Trinitarian be still further urged to shew in what way this divine equality exists—how far it is an equality—or, if not, what degrees of superiority or inferiority, he answers with St Paul, that God was manifest in the flesh; but that without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. He considers it therefore as a mystery, and makes no controversy about it. He knows nothing of the matter, nor suffers himself to enquire. All he contends for, is, that Christ was a divine as well as a human being, united to the Father; and as such, an object of worship."
